Intraday Commentary From Jim Bianco

2.5% for a rate cut in December. It was 95% yesterday. 2-year up 12 bps.

The Probability of a Fed Rate Cut at the December 10, 2025 FOMC Meeting

Bloomberg TV pointed out that when Powell said that December was not a "foregone conclusion," he looked down and read it off a script. Meaning was a deliberate message and not an off-the-cuff remark that might be misinterpreted.

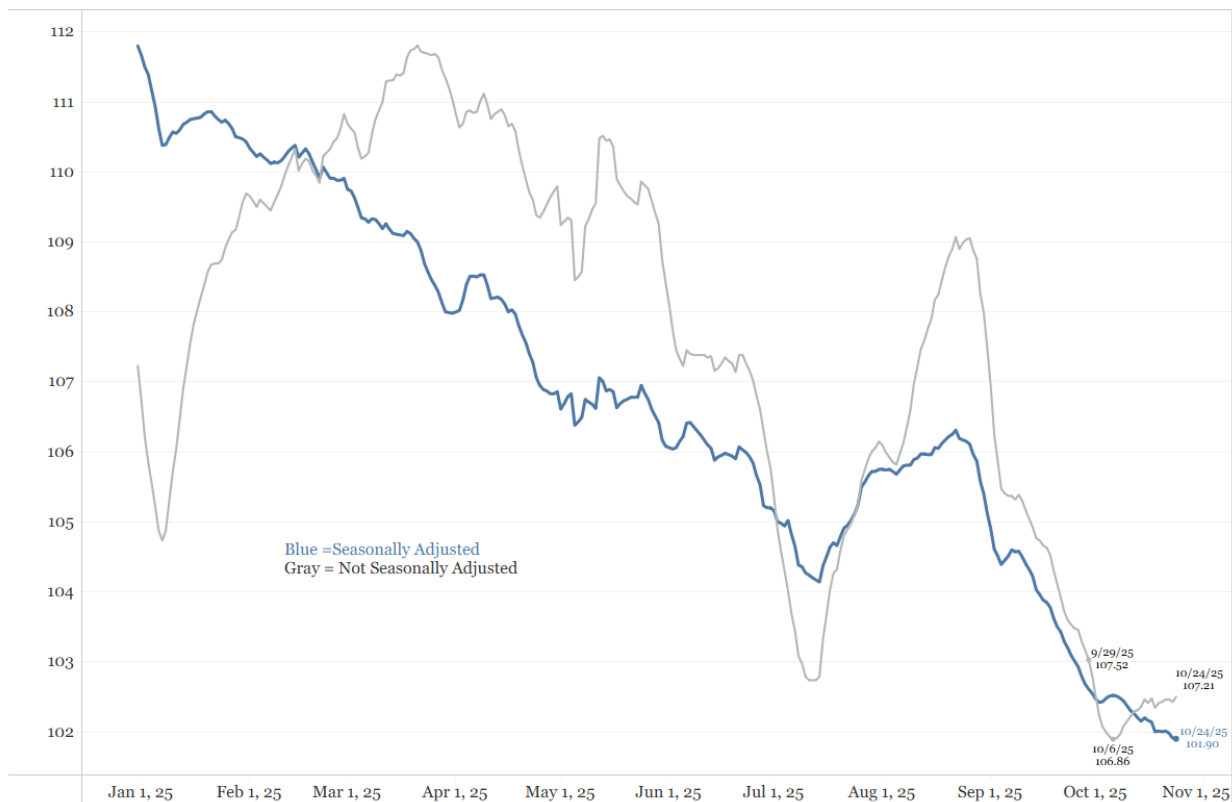

See the chart immediately above, which says the market is taking it very seriously. 10 minutes until the close, and then get a slew of mega-tech earnings.

*POWELL: INDEED JOB OPENINGS SUGGEST MARKET STABLE LAST 4 WEEKS

The chart below shows the series. Powell must be looking at the "not seasonally adjusted" season as the seasonally adjusted series does not suggest "stable."

Yesterday, SOFR (blue) was 16 basis points above Interest on Reserves (orange).

As the dotted line and box show, SOFR has effectively "undone" the first rate cut in September. As this arrow in the bottom panel shows, funding market rates are tightening. And the Fed announced another month of QT, which will continue squeezing these markets.

Where will this spread be on November 30? Will today's second cut get "undone" as well?

Car Dealership Guy:

Car Dealership Guy 🟡 @GuyDealership · 28m

Something wild is happening in the car market.

For some models, new is now cheaper than used.

How we got here:

Pandemic shortages left few 3-year-old cars, driving up used prices.

Add higher loan rates (7–9% vs 5–6% new) and the math flips.

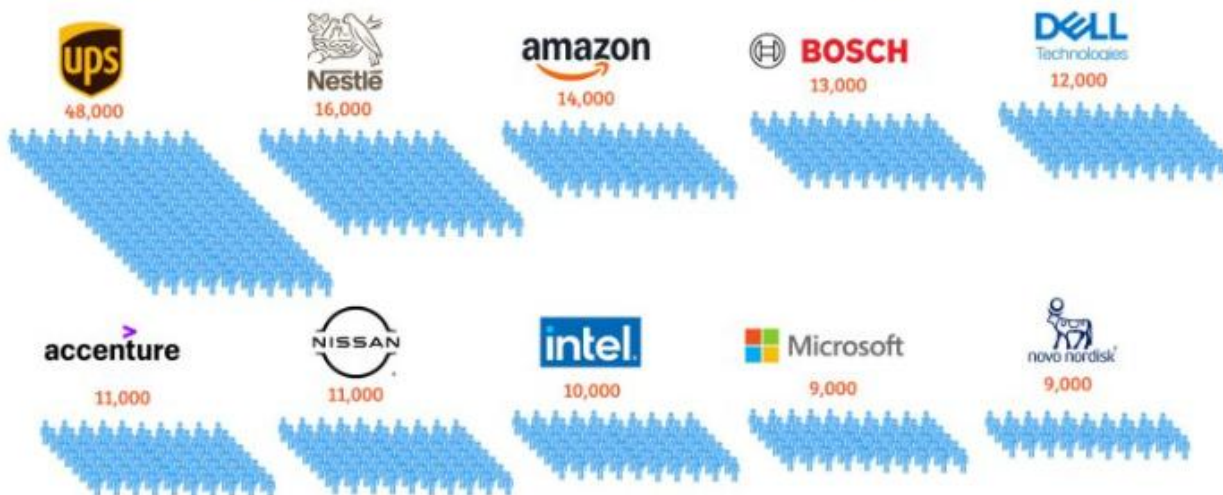

With warranties and service perks, new cars from brands like Toyota and Honda can cost less to own than used models.

A rare moment—and it won't last long.
