Can the U.S. Remain an Economic Outlier?

Thursday, January 15, at 8:00 AM CT (9:00 AM ET, 6:00 AM PT, and 14:00 GMT) Bianco Research, in conjunction with Arbor Research & Trading, will be hosting a webinar/teleconference moderated by Jim Bianco.

Long-term interest rates in the developed world rose in 2025, with the exception of the US 10-year yield. Developed-world central banks are expected to hike rates in 2026, with the exception of the UK and the US. The developed world is reacting to an outlook of sticky inflation and continued growth. The US is facing higher-than-average inflation and much stronger growth than the rest of the world and wants to continue cutting rates. Can the US maintain this stance given the data, or will it face a backlash from the bond market?

Intraday Commentary From Jim Bianco

Reminder ... expectations are that the tariff ruling will be out tomorrow. (To be specific, the Supreme Court will issue a ruling tomorrow. While they don't preannounce which case it is, expectations are high that it will be the tariff case.)

Bettors expect the court to rule against Trump.

Will the Supreme Court Rule in Favor of Trump's Tariffs?

While Trump is expected to lose the case, because he's been portraying tariffs as a tax and Congress has not passed a tax bill with tariffs, the big question is whether the court will order that all tariffs already paid refunded.

The betting market is leaning towards no refund at 42%. But 42% is not a high conviction.

Will a Court Order a Tariff Refund Before July 1, 2026?

I don't think they will order a refund because it would cause a significant economic disruption, and the court would be blamed for it. Yes, I'm arguing they are political. So I think they'll rule the tariffs are unconstitutional because Congress did not pass a tax bill with them, and then say Congress has the ability to remedy this problem so they should fix it and the court won't order a refund.
