Intraday Commentary From Jim Bianco

Client Question:

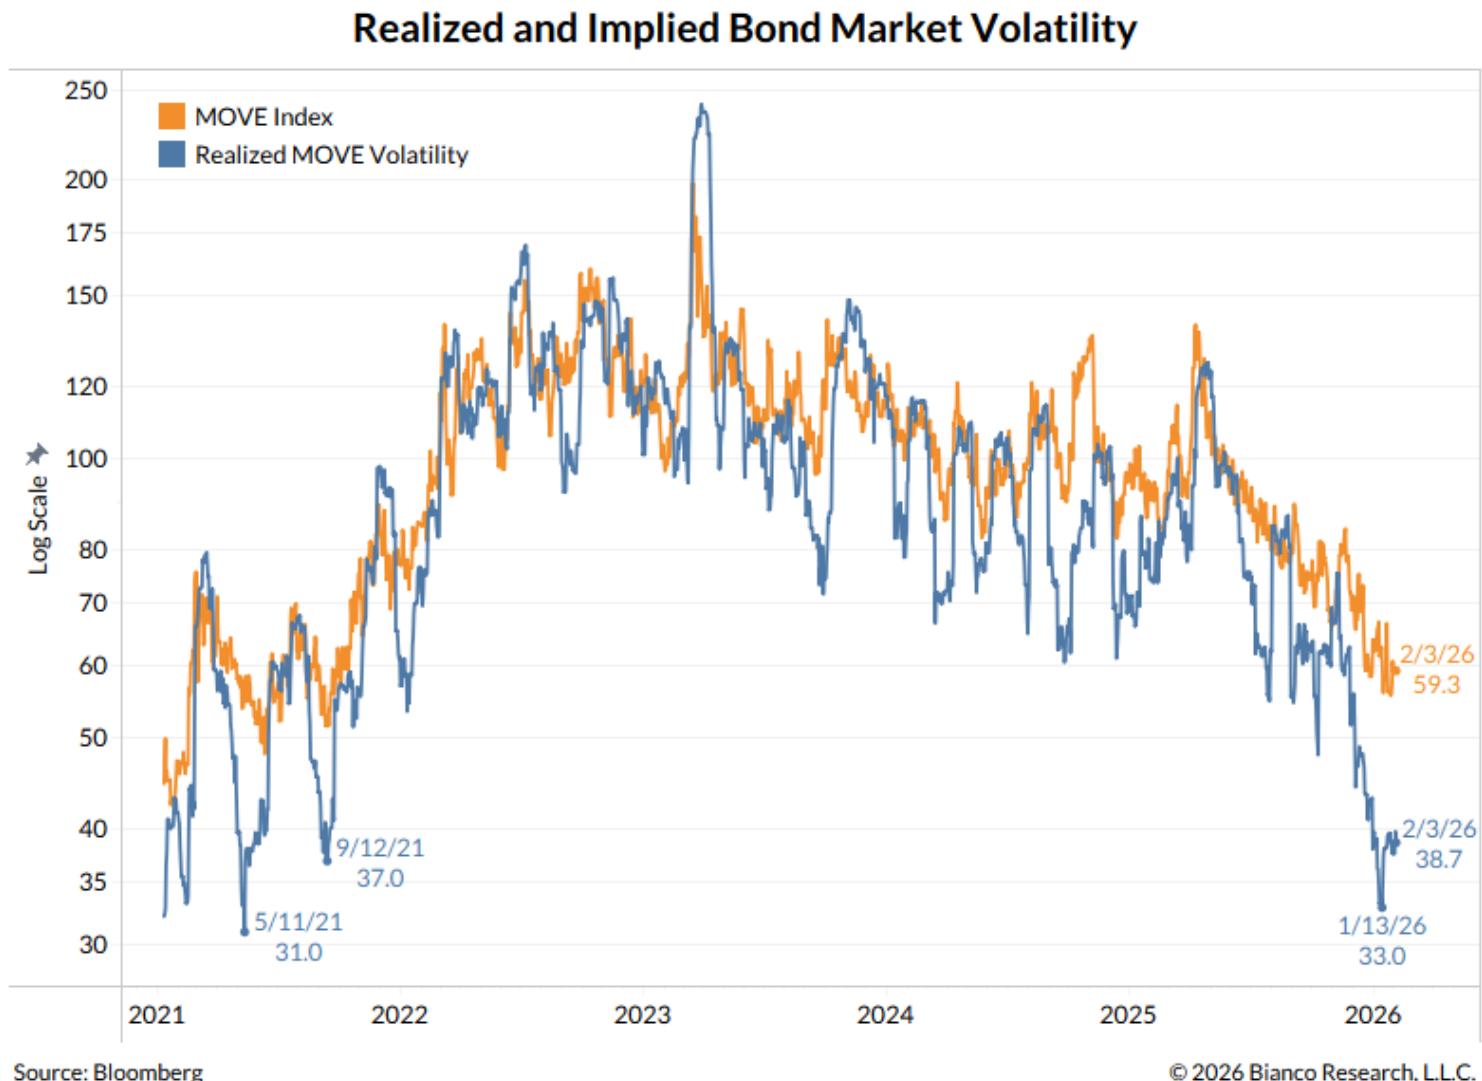

We have a new nominee for Fed chair, a falling dollar and GDP potentially growing by more than 5%. Through all this, bonds continue to trade sideways with volatility at multi-year lows. How much longer can this last?

In light of macro themes in the market, why do you think vol is depressed and the bond mkt trades sideways? Why isn't the bond mkt reacting to these themes? We still have a 4.27 % 10 yr, like we did in August (although of course its up from 4% area.) It sure seems the market would have moved more in light of the macro world.

Jim Bianco:

The blue line shows realized volatility, or the volatility that has actually been observed over the PAST 30 days.

The orange line is implied volatility, or what volatility level is the market is pricing for the NEXT 30 days.
